TOKIO, Japan, Oct. 22.—It is officially announced that a fleet is seeking a German fleet in Hawaiian waters.

Japanese Battleship Keeps 'Death Watch' For German Cruiser

Again the big, gray bulk of the Japanese battleship Hizen loomed up far to the south of Honolulu at daybreak this morning, this time accompanied by a large dark-painted steamer which some hours later was identified as a Japanese freighter and improvised collier, said to be the Hit-tori Maru.

Today the Hizen, estimated to be lying five miles off the port, is being coaled from its consort.

During the night the war vessel steamed several miles off the islands and at dawn nothing save the smoke from its three funnels was seen arising over the horizon. Apparently some miles astern was a thin wreath of vapor which marked the spot where the collier steamed in the trail of the battleship.

At 9 o'clock this morning the Hizen and the collier had been bridled and a busy throng of Japanese sailormen were working like beavers in the removal of a quantity of coal from the hold of the merchantman to the bunkers of the fighting ship. Those who braved a rough trip outside the three-mile limit were rewarded by a novel attraction in witnessing coaling operations carried on between two vessels riding on a swelling sea.

Much of the fuel had been placed in canvas sacks. The coal was brought up from the hold of the freighter and by the aid of large slings was swung across the intervening space that separated the vessels and landed near the bunker hatches of the Hizen. Several hundred men swarmed the decks of the battleship as well as the collier. The work had not been completed at 2 o'clock this afternoon, the intention being to transfer sufficient coal to the Hizen to last the vessel for about one week.

Shortage of Coal Now Threatens.
The Hizen may face a shortage of fuel about negotiations now pending between the consular representatives of the several powers. Collector of Customs Franklin and Admiral Moore result in granting an extended delay to the little German cruiser Geier to complete repairs to its boilers and machinery, declared necessary to put the vessel in seaworthy condition.

The prediction is made that the Geier may not be compelled to leave this port or intern for some weeks should the claim made by Captain Rasthoff, commander of the Geier, receive favor.
